Women's tennis

Today, tennis is a serious international sport and a multi-billion dollar industry. And this is one of the most challenging sports in which men have enough opportunities to earn money. But it was not always so. Tennis has a long and famous history. Although today it is a sports stadium rich in sponsors, excellent equipment, and TV coverage, it used to look different.

Even though we perceive tennis as a sport, in fact, in the critical role played by specialized modern equipment, it is very many years old. The earliest forms of tennis were popular in the French monasteries, and formerly not rackets were used, but one's own hands. This game was transformed into the so-called real tennis (yes, "real tennis"), which is still played today. This was important in the courts of medieval Europe — and led to the death of at least three kings: James I in Scotland and Louis X and Charles VIII in France. It makes the receiver wait in a new way, right?

Tennis in the form we know it appeared in the middle of the 19th century in Britain, and then it was called “lawn tennis.” And from the very beginning, he was popular among women. How has women’s tennis changed over time? Let’s see in the full article

Football NFTs

Non-Fungible Tokens (NFTs) are virtual units on the blockchain or non-fungible tokens. Put: it is a unique “code” that confirms your right to own a particular digital asset. In a rough analogy, this is similar to the CVV code on your bank card, even a virtual one. This is only your map, although you can generally draw the same one. So the NFT token secures your right to own the product you have purchased. It is a virtual version or a copy.

At the same time, the code cannot be faked or stolen; it is stored on blockchain platforms. This does not mean that the same picture cannot be drawn — it is possible, and there have even been successful attempts to fake an NFT token. However, the original is still the original.

NFTs, which became very popular in contemporary art (suffice it to recall the artist Beeple, who sold work in this format for almost $70 million), quickly took over sports — especially football.

Athletes create their cards or art with artists. One of the first was American football player Patrick Mahomes, who decided to launch The Mage Museum, a $15,000 series of digital art of himself. Fellow NFL player Rob Gronkowski sold $1.2 million worth of cards. American athletes are generally very active in this direction.
